[-----],

I noticed [your] ad on [the Internet]. I would be thrilled to be associated with your restaurant.

I am looking for a part time, casual, position. Ideally this means a couple of three-hour lunch shifts per week (Mon & Wed, 10:30AM-1:30PM ??) with additional availability for some last minute fill in work a few times a month. In short, what I call a hobby job.

I bring countless years of fast food experience and many other skill sets. My main desire in taking a job with [you] would be to learn your way of cooking and presenting food. I would be most happy as some sort of assistant/prep cook, but would be willing to bus, wait, or whatever. I would be an eager and flexible employee.

In working a hobby job, I look forward to:

- Gain experience with your operations
- Have an opportunity to socialize, and
- Earn a few extra bucks.
- Get some exercise (I am willing, able, and eager to hustle -- abliet in three hour bursts)

In fact, one of the major advantages to my working short shifts is that I can be well rested, in top form, and looking forward to every shift.

I hope we can work something out.

Sincerely,

Brett Paufler
